BOOKS

At night we sail over the inky black sea,
me and my dad, in our little red boat.
We cast out our nets and wait in the dark,
and the starlight shines above us.

Cliffs loom above us, waves crash on the rocks
and our little red boat dips and rolls.
But a beam of light pierces through the dark night
and the lighthouse guides us home.

Safe in the harbour we tie up our boat,
where it bobs beside its neighbours.
Then we clamber the slippery steps back ashore
and the streetlights guide us home.
