Gigantosaurus - Dinos to the Rescue

No sooner had the water settled, than a huge, toothy creature reared its head out of the lake, and fixed its eyes on Mazu.
"LOOK OUT!" shouted Bill. "Army's behind you!"
Terminator snapped at Mazu just as she leapt to safety.

The little dino hid until the coast was clear. Bill was right - they DID need a lookout!
"If I hadn't listened to your warning, something terrible could have happened..."
Mazu gaped. Luckily she knew just what to fetch to say thank you.
"Be back soon!" she called, dashing out of sight.

A little while later, Mazu returned with a gift for Bill.
"This is a floating flower," she said. "It's rare and should be appreciated, just like you!"
Bill nibbled a petal. "It's DELICIOUS! Have you got any more?"
"In Bill for dino like us, the flowers are special once-in-a-while treats," Mazu explained. "The flowers grow in the swamp and are the ONLY food the horseshoe crabs can eat."

Bill hadn't been at the flower bush long, when two archaeopteryxes landed beside him.
"What are they doing?" wondered Rocky, looking on.
Tiny shrugged. "It looks like they're picking something off the horseshoes' shells."

With an armful of flowers, Bill waded back to the others.

Tiny's face fell when she saw all of the flowers Bill was carrying.
"How come you've got so many?" she asked. "Mazu said that the horseshoe crabs need them."

Rocky swallowed a petal. "They are really yummy!" he agreed.
Tiny sighed. If everyone else was eating them, it must be OK for her to try just one...
"Oh wow," she cried. "I LOVE THEM!"
