DRIP

This is Drip.
Drip is a tiny drop of water.

Have you seen Drip before?

Here is a garden full of beautiful flowers.

They look a little thirsty,
so it's time to water them!

But
what's this?

There is only one
tiny drop
of water.

A single drop
won't do for this
dried-up garden.
Flowers and trees need
water to live.

What will the gardener do?

All of a sudden,
Drip disappears down the drain.

Drip falls deep into the underground maze
of tunnels and pipes.

Where will
it lead?

TO THE SEA

On Drip
goes . . .

. . . pushed along with all
the other drops of water.

Finally, Drip comes out the other end!

Splash!

Quack!

The river flows fast through the bustling city,
full of sights and sounds.

Drip is swept along by the current.

The river winds around mountains,
past farmers working hard in the fields.

Drip is carried all the way to the sea.

But this is not where Drip's journey ends.
It is just beginning.

The sea is big and blue
as far as the eye can see.

The sun shines.
The ocean is warm.

Tiny drops of water like Drip float up into the air, becoming ...

... a cloud!

Back past the snowy mountaintops . . .

The wind blows Drip
back towards land.

. . . and the farmers working
hard in the fields.

Past the bustling city
of skyscrapers and tooting cars.

Until, at last, Drip makes it back to the dried-up garden and its sad little gardener.

Then, it starts to rain.

Drop by drop, the rain soaks
through the soil and into the roots
of the trees and plants.

Here is Drip.
Drip is a tiny drop
of water . . .

. . . and here is the garden,
full of life once more.

Drip is a drop of water
going on an adventure.
Will Drip become
a drop of rain?
