

SPREAD YOUR WINGS

Emma Dodd

When you came into my life
I saw the world anew.
But nothing could prepare me
for the love I feel for you.

Safely tucked beneath my wing
in our cozy treetop nest,
you snuggle warm and close to me.
These moments are the best.

As we cuddle here together,
gazing at the sky,
I know that soon the day will come when you'll spread your wings and fly.

And when the time is right,
I know that you'll be fine.
Stretch out your wings and you will see that they are strong, like mine.

And then you will be flying,
soaring way up high . . .

swooping, diving, circling
in the wild blue sky.

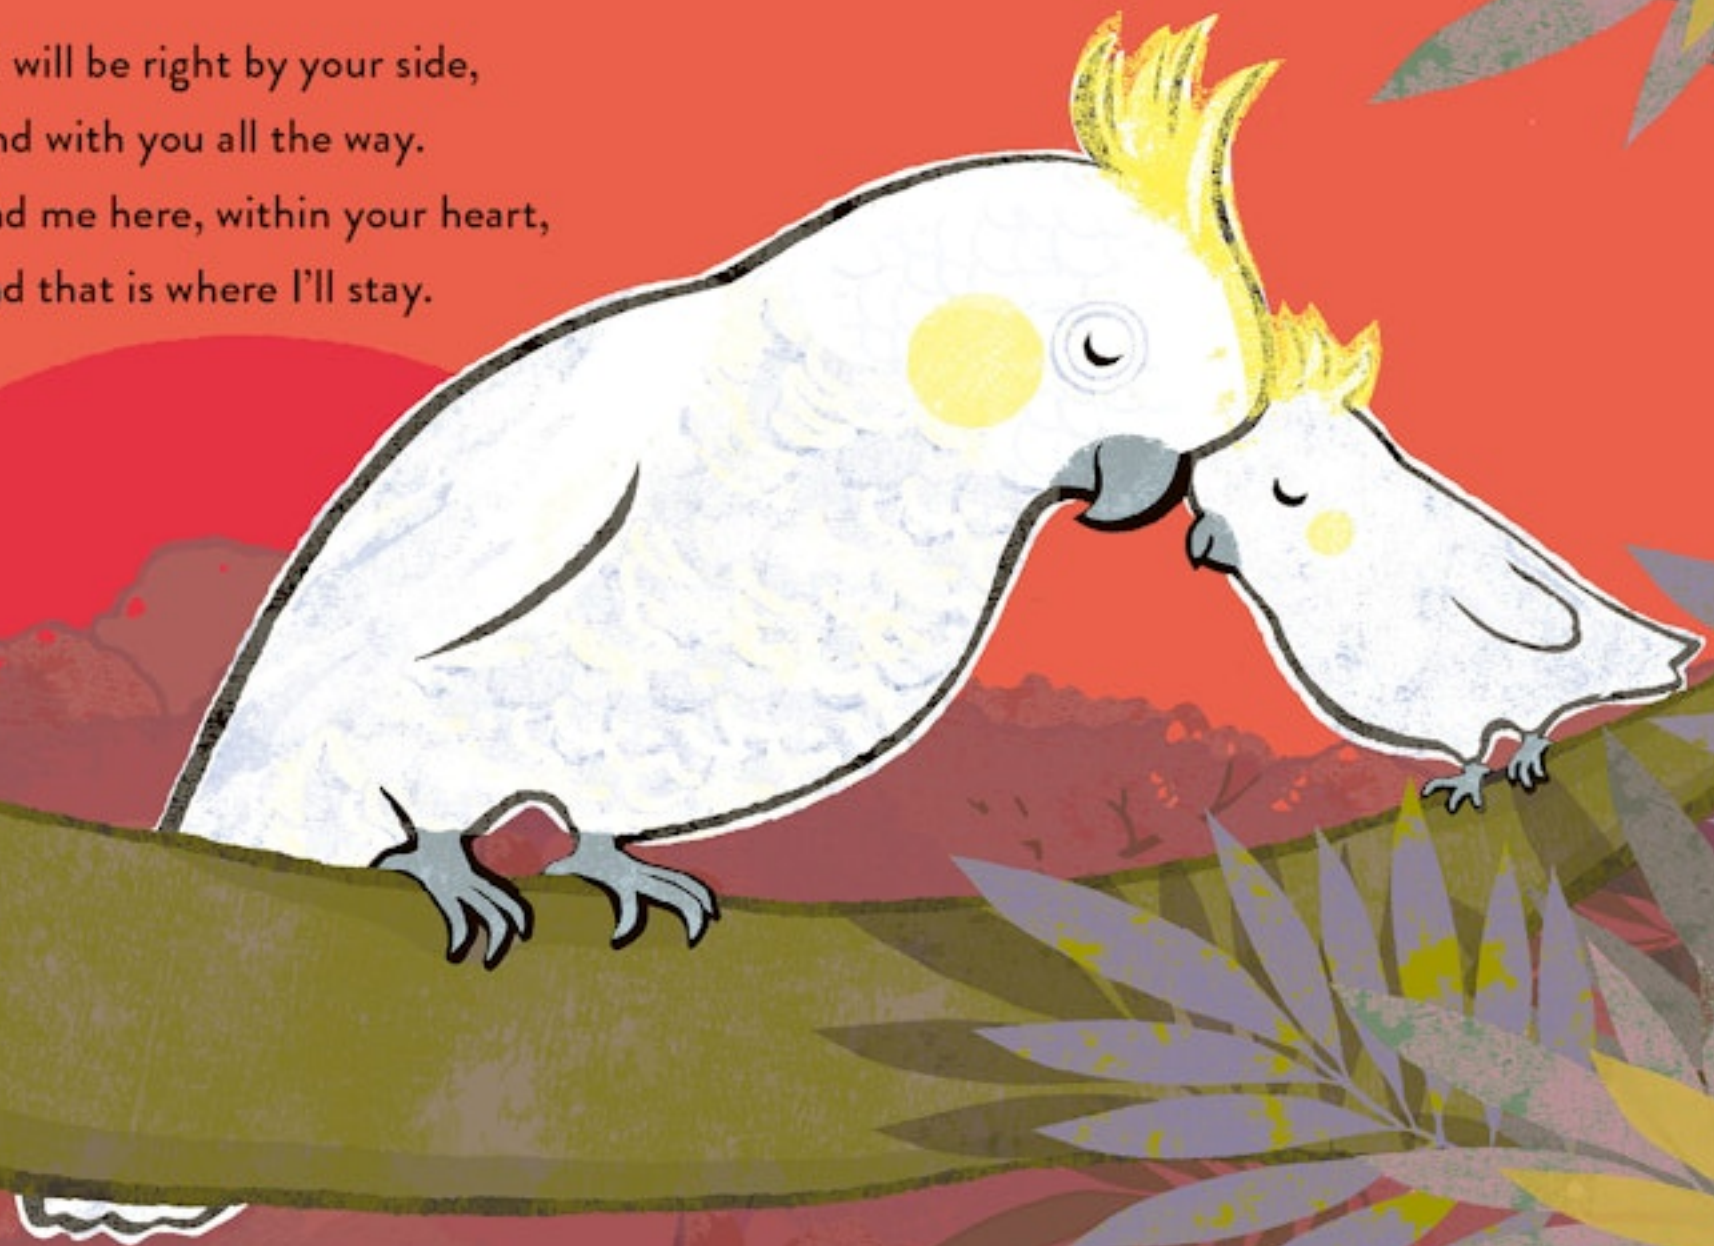

The world may seem a scary place
when you're far from home.

But anywhere you go, my love,
you'll never be alone.

For I will be right by your side,
and with you all the way.
You'll find me here, within your heart,
and that is where I'll stay.

And when you spread your wings
to find adventures of your own,
please know I'll always be here
when you want to come back home.

The world is waiting for you,
its endless skies above.

But now we're here together
in our home filled with love.
