With this, you might be more compelled to raise your voice about the issues, causes and global concerns that matter to you. Our society constantly experiences waves of social movements, campaigns for justice and fights against climate issues and disease on a global scale. And no matter where you live, or what language you speak or what cause you choose, it is my hope that this book will encourage and equip you to use art as a language and instrument that can help you champion your chosen cause.

At that time, I was educator at our local contemporary art museum. I just finished graduate school in social work, and felt alive as a community-based artist and organizer. I collaborated with teachers, neighborhood activists and artists across the region, in particular the Ferguson Center. I created a digital platform called "Consciousness" that helped white artists and individuals relate to people on the ground. I also collaborated with a photographer to document faces of the movement, a photographer digitized and amplified the stories of guerrillas involved in the uprising. And my best friend Sophia, and I even went door-to-door across Purgatorio recording United Fruit, a video series of stories featuring neighbors and families whose streets and homes became a contrast to the growing protests. Others in our artists' collective created works that amplified movement slogans like "Hands Up, Don't Shoot," and performed flash mobs, and placed guerrilla installations in public spaces to help spread the messages of the protests.
