Bob's Best Ever Friend

Will Bob's new friend be everything he was looking for?

- Stunning bold illustrations created by Simon Bartram
- Beautiful foiling on the front cover
- Sold over 40,000 copies (as of July 2022)

Bob's Best Ever Friend

The next day Bob didn't have to start work until the evening, so after some early star-jumps in the garden he cycled into town to do a spot of shopping.

Firstly, he had a quick peek around the modern art gallery. Then he bought two smolich batteries (the power he needed), a smart pair of moon-patterned underpants (that price in the book) and a newspaper (that off the press).

The streets were busier than ever. Bob wondered how on earth anyone could hope to spot a best-ever friend in a place like this!

Bob had a good look around inside, but he couldn't see anything that looked like a best-ever friend.

To tell you the truth, some of the animals looked a little odd to him.

"Oh well," sighed Bob to himself. "You can't rush these things."

His thoughts were interrupted by the chimes of the town clock. It was half past four – time for Tea!

Bob welcomed the tourists with a free mini picnic and a speech. Then he performed his thrilling moon-themed variety show and everyone went home happy.

Everyone, that is, except Bob, who was alone once more. Quietly, he packed away his props and began his weekly crater-count.

And that's when it happened!

There, popping out of crater 204, was a little furry tail. What could it be? The closer Bob got to it, the faster the tail wagged and then, as if by magic, something amazing shot out of the crater.

No one in the whole universe would have expected to see what Bob saw at that moment.

It was a Tuesday morning in space and nothing much was happening.

By ten o'clock, Bob, the Man on the Moon, had finished all of his jobs for the day.

There were no space tourists to entertain and his friends, Billy and Sam, were away on a day trip to Pluto, visiting a most exciting pet show. They hoped to see some alien animals there, but Bob thought they'd be disappointed. After all, everyone knows there's no such thing as aliens, and especially not alien animals.

With nobody to talk to, Bob felt a little glum. Then, at lunchtime, he even had to bounce on his bouncy castle alone. And that had never, but never happened before!

Quite frankly, Bob was a bit lonely.

Bob and the Moontree Mystery

A new tree growing on the moon has Bob baffled.

- Stunning bold illustrations created by Simon Bartram
- Beautiful foiling on the front cover

Bob and the Moontree Mystery

News of the golden podberries spread quickly, say after day more space tourists arrived, astounded at the incredible sight.

Many bought souvenirs. Soap-on-a-rope podberries in particular sold like hot cakes, but Bob had to explain again and again that the golden podberries were absolutely not for sale.

NO way, no how.

Neither, of course, was the Moontree itself. Though he still didn't know why it was there, Bob did know that it was his job to protect it.

And protect it he would.

It was a Friday morning in space. Bob, the Man on the Moon, and his best-ever friend Barry were hard at work giving the dark side of the Moon a tip-top tidy up. And that's when they noticed it – a strange beany-seedy thing glowing near crater 1973.

Bob was puzzled. Despite being the world's most brainy Moon expert, he had never seen anything like it before. He knelt down to get a closer look. Suddenly, the beany-seedy thing sprang up and briskly bounced away. Bob and Barry looked at each other in astonishment.

Whatever could it be?

Hotel Flamingo: Frosty Fiesta

The nights were growing long and dark, and Hotel Flamingo was preparing for a winter without many guests.

'Why is it so quiet?' asked Anna, hovering near the reception desk. 'We could really do with more bookings.' Lemmy shrugged. 'Less sun means less fun. See it as a chance to put your feet up, miss.'

Anna sighed and surveyed the empty hotel foyer. It was as sad and lifeless as a party after everyone had gone home. Perhaps a rest would be good for her, she thought.

But at that very moment the lift chimed and Mrs Turpington – the hotel's resident tortoise – appeared.

'Good evening, my dear,' she said to Anna. 'I was wondering if you might help me?'

'It would be my pleasure,' said Anna, excited to have something to do. Mrs Turpington had been Anna's first guest at Hotel Flamingo, so she always felt extra fond of her.

'At this time of year I must hibernate,' said Mrs Turpington, 'and before I go to sleep for the cold winter months all my fellow long-sleepers and I like to throw a little party. We give presents – usually nice treats to eat upon waking – and talk about our hopes for the coming year.'

'That sounds delightful,' said Anna. 'It always is,' agreed the tortoise, 'so, you see, I was hoping we could hold it in your restaurant.'

'We'd be honoured,' said Anna – never one to pass up a business opportunity.

'I hoped you'd say that,' said Mrs Turpington joyfully. 'We'll need gentle food to line our stomachs, of course – nothing spicy or gassy that might make us restless.'

'Of course!' said Anna. 'A green salad perhaps?'

'Oh yes,' said the tortoise. 'And maybe a little cake?' Mrs Turpington gave a naughty smile.

'I'm pleased to hear it!' laughed Anna. 'And how many guests would it be for?'

'Oh, let me see,' said Mrs Turpington. She took out a little address book from her handbag and flicked carefully through the pages. 'There would be Svetlana, Henri, Tinks and Winnie. I may have forgotten a few; my memory isn't what it was...'

'So let's say ten for safety's sake,' said Anna.

'Perfect,' said Mrs Turpington. 'I'm getting sleepier by the day, so is Friday suitable? That should be enough time for me to send out invites. Perhaps if I pass the details to you, you could contact everyone for me?'

'Certainly, I'll write it in the diary now,' said Anna.

'Good, good,' said the ageing tortoise, and with a satisfied nod she walked through the reception and into the restaurant for supper.

'Well, that's something!' said Anna. 'I'll book it in and make arrangements with Madame Le Pig,' said Lemmy, a bit annoyed that his plans for a lie-down had to be put on hold.

As Lemmy wrote down the details in the diary, Stella Giraffe came running down the staircase with her toolbox swinging at her side.

'Have you heard the news?' she said.

'We're in for a cold snap! A real arctic storm is coming in tonight!'

'Urgh!' said Lemmy. He hated the cold.

'I suppose it is almost winter, after all,' said Anna.

'They say it won't be just any old cold spell,' said Stella. 'Blizzards, freezing temperatures, the works! It'll be unlike anything Animal Boulevard has ever seen – and it could last for weeks, so they reckon!'

'Goodness,' said Anna. 'That does sound serious.'

Stella jabbed the air with a spanner.

'Nothing wrong with being prepared,' she said. 'I'll check the boiler and start lagging the pipes. This old place isn't cut out for proper cold... It may also be worth cleaning out the chimneys and fireplaces!' She continued ticking off an invisible list of chores on her hooves, and then, with her plans in place, marched away.

'Winter is the worst,' said Lemmy. 'It's too cold to do anything, let alone think!'

'I'm sure it won't be as bad as Stella
