Building Bonds

BUILDING BONDS

Transcendent hope: When hope is part of your daily being and personality. It's a general feeling of optimism and hopefulness about the future. For example, living by the following mantras: 'This too shall pass' and 'One day at a time'.

If you do not identify with any of these definitions of hope, ask yourself the following:

- Is there anyone in your life who you view as hopeful?
- What do you like about the way they express hope about things?
- Can you imagine yourself borrowing a bit of their hope for a while?

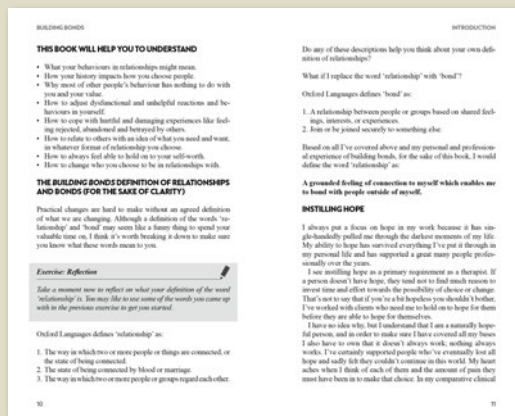

If life feels hopeless a lot of the time, it is a good idea to speak to a therapist or mental health professional. You will find ways of contacting mental health professionals on pages 225-226.

HOW TO USE THIS BOOK

This book is split into six chapters. Chapter One ('Self') looks at your relationship with yourself. Chapter Two is a short chapter which provides essential information about boundaries, wants and needs and attachment styles. Chapter Three focuses on Family Relationships. Chapter Four covers Friendships. Chapter Five looks at Romantic Relationships and dating. Chapter Six is all about Workplace Relationships and Chapter Seven explores On-line and Digital Relationships.

Each main chapter starts with a reflective statement for you to ponder, before providing an in-depth exploration of each type of relationship and several practical exercises. I've structured the information offered to reflect the developmental process of each relationship and the different choices that can be made along the way, and why.

For example: how it begins, what the journey of that relationship generally looks like throughout your lifespan, and the effect that your choices can have on you, both positive and negative. We will also focus on how to work with difficulties and differences which will include resolving conflict and how to communicate more effectively, as well as support to help you move on from relationships that no longer serve you, should you choose to.

The chapters and indeed the subtitled sections, stand alone in their own right so you can read them in any order and refer to them at any time. I do urge you to read the information in the order I have written it as the book builds on itself. However, if you do choose to read things out of order, I have cross-referenced as much as possible so you can read the connecting information.

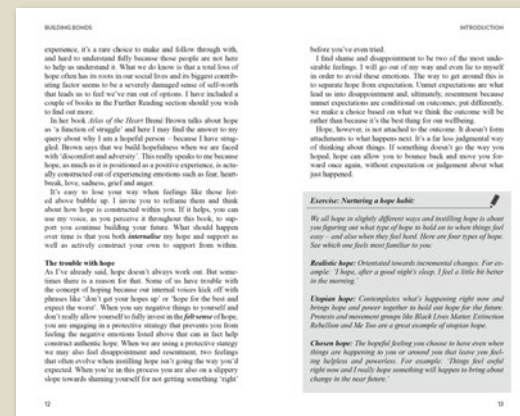

We are going to cover a lot of ground and it's likely that not everything will apply to you right now... At the very end of each chapter is a summary which includes the main messages we've covered. Reading this will help you condense the information so you can come back to it when you feel it is more relevant to you and your life.

It's to be expected, when you are reading about relationships, that you start to think of the people in your life who 'should' know, read, understand or reflect on the same messages. In my experience, it is impossible to get someone to read a book if they don't want to. BUT you might just be able to get them to take 60 seconds to read the summary and then, maybe you can share what you learned with them verbally. If they will not even read the summary in their own time, read it to them and see if it sparks any interest. If that's not realistic, do yourself a favour and let it go – focus on yourself.

At the back of the book, you'll find further reading lists and web links for each chapter, as well as guidance on contacting mental health professionals and support teams. On pages 228-232 you will also find a glossary of terms. If I have not defined a term within the main text of the book, the first use of each defined term will appear as bold italic text and be defined in the glossary. If you don't know what something means, please read the definition as it'll support your understanding of the content.

Before we get started I need you to know that...

In relationships, and pretty much all of life, there are two types experience, it's a rare choice to make and follow through with, and hard to understand fully because these people are not here to help us understand it. What we do know is that a total loss of hope often has its roots in our social lives and its biggest contributing factor seems to be a severely damaged sense of self-worth that leads us to feel we've run out of options. I have included a couple of books in the Further Reading section should you wish to find out more.

In her book Gifts of the Heart Brené Brown talks about hope as 'a function of struggle' and here I want to find the answer to my query about why I am a hopeful person – because I have struggled. Brené says that we build resilience when we are faced with 'discomfort and adversity'. This really speaks to me because hope, as much as it is positioned as a positive experience, is actually connected out of experiencing emotions such as fear, heartbreak, loss, sadness, grief and anger.

It's easy to lose your way when feelings like these kind of above bubble up. I write you to reassure them and think about how hope is connected within you. If it helps, you can use my voice, as you peruse it throughout this book, to inspire you continue building your future. What should happen over time is that you both internalise my hope and support as well as actively connect your own to support them.

The trouble with hope
As I've already said, hope doesn't always work out. But sometimes there is a reason for that. Some of us have trouble with the concept of hoping because our internal voices kick off with phrases like 'don't get your hopes up' or 'hope for the best and expect the worst'. When you are negative things to yourself and don't really allow yourself to fully invest in the felt sense of hope, you are engaging in a protective strategy that prevents you from feeling the negative emotions linked above that can in fact help construct authentic hope. When we are using a protective strategy we may also feel disappointment and resentment, two feelings that often evolve when instilling hope isn't going the way you'd expected. When you're in this process you are also on a slippery slope towards shaming yourself for not getting something 'right' before you've even tried.

I find shame and disappointment to be two of the most undesirable feelings. I will go out of my way and even be to myself in order to avoid these emotions. The way to get around this is to separate hope from expectation. Unmet expectations are what lead us into disappointment and, ultimately, resentment because unmet expectations are conditional on outcomes, put differently, we make a choice based on what we think the outcome will be rather than because it's the best thing for our wellbeing.

Hope, however, is not attached to the outcome. It doesn't form attachments to what happens next. It's a far less judgemental way of thinking about things. If something doesn't go the way you hoped, hope can allow you to bounce back and move you forward once again, without expectation or judgement about what just happened.

Exercise: Narrowing a hope habit:
We all hope in slightly different ways and instilling hope is about you figuring out what type of hope to hold on to when things feel away – and also when they feel hard. Here are four types of hope. See which one feels most familiar to you.

Realistic hope: Oriented towards incremental changes. For example: 'I hope, after a good night's sleep, I feel a little bit better in the morning.'

Uplifted hope: Contemplates what's happening right now and brings hope and power together to hold on hope for the future. Positive and momentary hopes like Black Lives Matter, Extinction Rebellion and Me Too are a great example of uplifted hope.

Chosen hope: The hopeful feeling you choose to have even when things are happening to you or around you that leave you feeling helpless and powerless. For example: 'Things felt awful right now and I really hope something will happen to bring about change in the near future.'
