Ancient Love Stories

THE SACRED BAND OF THEBES

This was the final meeting place of the Sacred Band of Thebes, one of the most remarkable and most loyal armies that had ever lived. A bold experiment in an age torn apart by warring wars and between alliances, who had been fighting for the freedom of the Greeks. As they met, just one of soldiers, but of a hundred and fifty such heroes.

Bound together by love loyalty to each other, the crack team of warriors was founded in Thebes in 378 BC by an extraordinary visionary by the name of Pausanias. It began as a resistance corps against the looming military power of Sparta (renowned the world over for its famously trained soldiers) across the mountain to the south. These were chivalrous, quarrelsome young men, splashing blood across the pages of history, and well suited to the birth of a new kind of army.

HANNIBAL AND ANTONIO

These parts first crossed across years earlier, when Hannibal - ruler of the Roman world and self-proclaimed prince of peace - took a summer journey across the Roman province of Bithynia, in northern Turkey, where Antonio had his home. The response, born with the day, probably did not spare Antonio among the crowds of admiring subjects and eager petitioners. But one of his visitors did - not a noble, with an eye to the emperor's favor, but a soldier in the making in the beautiful, leather-clad young man. Antonio was duly offered a downy secret admission to the exclusive imperial circle along with a tuition package to the emperor's personal academy in Rome. To be true, from a dusty village on the fringes of the Roman empire, this must have seemed an offer too good to be true - a one-way ticket to live among the stars. But, it was a good mistake if anything would have known, by invitation to the sun and you might get burned.

Antonio's due to the top was not even by Roman standards, where there were plenty of high classes who made it to the big time. But among the other staff of the imperial household, Antonio - although good-looking, smart, with a magnetic personality and a sincere voice for Hannibal's beloved home - quickly caught the emperor's eye. Hannibal was intensely honored, and Antonio became his partner. In the summer of 128 BC, at the age of seventeen, Antonio was personally selected to accompany Hannibal on a tour of Greece (Hannibal was a notorious Greek enthusiast, then said: Asia Minor and, finally, Egypt).

It was clear to everyone that Hannibal was something to be Antonio out of his sight - and together, they took part in many extraordinary experiences on their round-the-world trip. A night-long day into mystical woods in the Thracian Mountains of Greece. A brief hour in the highlands of Asia Minor. A quest - about the searching out of Hannibal's much-loved Greek mythology books - to take down a mountain lion that had been terrorizing the people of Licia. On all these adventures, the new obsession with each other grew steadily.

MARK ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA

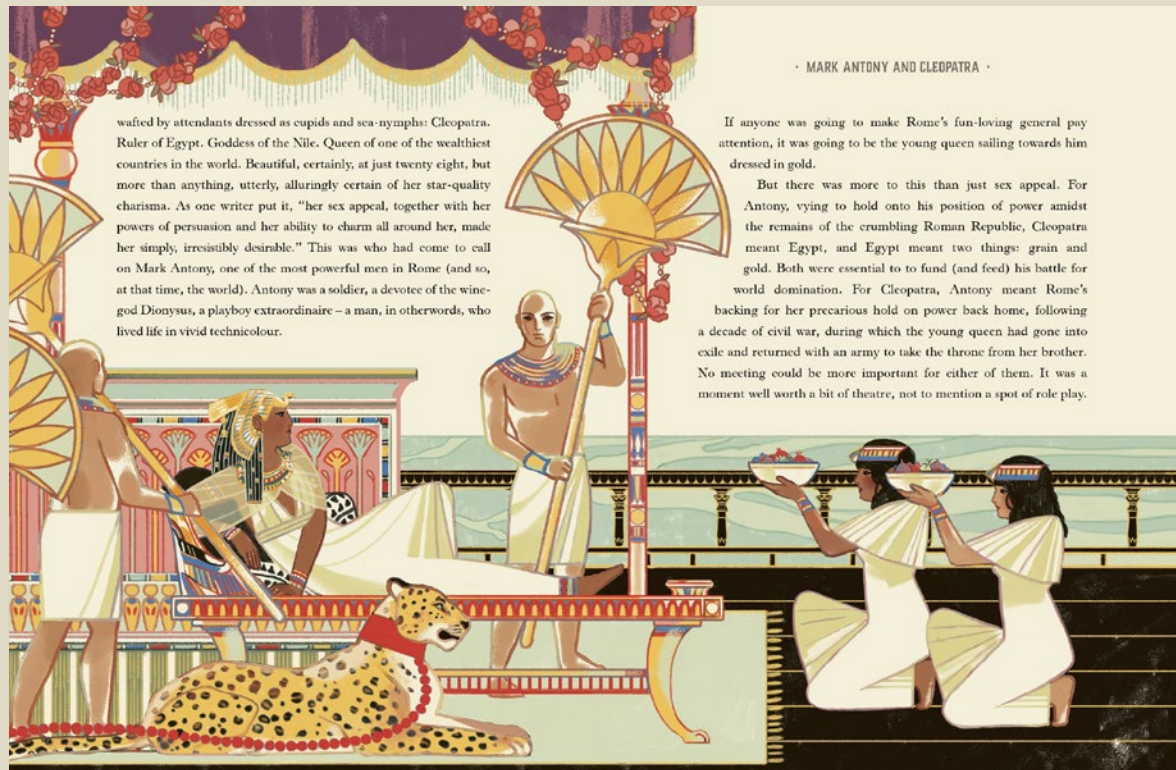

Mark Antony was to his side and that was his story. He responded to him, to keep their children safe, and give him a last promise of his love.

And in that moment, the man who controlled the world, with the daunting multitude of an empire, with the divine throne and the greatest mountains, that you would never know, or when the sun you had known, you, the man who had been to his side, as the walls became children and the earth had been his. He would build a towering monument in his memory, a 100 ft high, the world was still in change with time. People would watch, slowly, slowly, of their love.

The story of Mark Antony and Cleopatra is one of the most famous love stories of all time. A tale so powerful, so romantic, so tragically and almost impossibly romantic, that it would seem to be told through the great love affairs of Rome. A love story that, like the rest of the rest of time as we know it, the world over, showing millions of lives on a new fully playthings in the great world.

It all started when Cleopatra, the queen of the great Egyptian Empire, fell in love with the Roman Emperor, the man who had been to his side, as the walls became children and the earth had been his. He would build a towering monument in his memory, a 100 ft high, the world was still in change with time. People would watch, slowly, slowly, of their love.

At the time, the Egyptian empire was down to such a desolate state. The great Egyptian empire, the great, ancient Egypt, had been done with by the Romans from the mountains in the north, barely a hundred wafted by attendants dressed as cupids and sea-nymphs: Cleopatra. Ruler of Egypt. Goddess of the Nile. Queen of one of the wealthiest countries in the world. Beautiful, certainly, at just twenty eight, but more than anything, utterly, alluringly certain of her star-quality charisma. As one writer put it, "her sex appeal, together with her powers of persuasion and her ability to charm all around her, made her simply, irresistibly desirable." This was who had come to call on Mark Antony, one of the most powerful men in Rome (and so, at that time, the world). Antony was a soldier, a devotee of the wine-god Dionysus, a playboy extraordinaire - a man, in other words, who lived life in vivid technicolour.

If anyone was going to make Rome's fun-loving general pay attention, it was going to be the young queen sailing towards him dressed in gold.

But there was more to this than just sex appeal. For Antony, vying to hold onto his position of power amidst the remains of the crumbling Roman Republic, Cleopatra meant Egypt, and Egypt meant two things: grain and gold. Both were essential to fund (and feed) his battle for world domination. For Cleopatra, Antony meant Rome's backing for her precarious hold on power back home, following a decade of civil war, during which the young queen had gone into exile and returned with an army to take the throne from her brother. No meeting could be more important for either of them. It was a moment well worth a bit of theatre, not to mention a spot of role play.

Locomotion

Today, railways are commonplace in many parts of the world. They snake around our coastline, zip across our countryside and transport goods and millions of passengers every single day. It is strange to think that they have only been around as we Rabbits existed long before the first steam engines were invented. These 'valleys' appeared in Europe during the 17th century and were designed to make transport work easier. Flaxyheads were moved by horse-powered engines, which ran on wooden plants. The red and black tracks moving materials like stone and coal through gardens and woods.

Once the lines of steam locomotives caught on, there was no looking back. Pulling flatcars built by William Hedley to haul lumber, an engine of the 18th century (1813), the first self-propelled locomotive in the world, pulled a flatcar with a crane and a small coal pile, which provided power for the wooden rails, making it possible to haul even heavier loads.

Pulling fully went on to influence many other engineers. The first public railway to use steam locomotives, the Stockton and Darlington Railway in England, opened in 1825. It was designed by George Stephenson, who went on to be known as the Father of Railways for his influential role in so many early railways.

One of the surprisingly most significant decisions was not the gauge for British railways. The gauge is the distance between the rails and is measured from the inside edge of one rail to the other. By using the same gauge on different railways, Stephenson could assure that the train was compatible when they connected. He decided on a gauge of 7,620mm, which became known as the 'standard gauge'. Today, more than half of the world's railways use this gauge.

One of Thompson's most significant decisions occurred on the gauge for British railroads. The gauge is the distance between the rails and is measured from the inside edge of one rail to the other. By using the same gauge on different railroads, Thompson could assure that the train cars compatible when they connected. He decided on a gauge of 7.625m, which became known as the "standard gauge." Today, more than half of the world's railroads use this gauge.

The standard gauge was not without its rivals. In central England, Brunel, engineer of the British Great Western Railway, insisted on a much wider gauge when he designed the line between London and Bristol, which opened in 1826. The wider tracks, set at a width of 2.5 metres, allowed for more stability at speed, and bigger vehicles which could carry greater loads. Unfortunately, for Brunel, his ideas arrived too late to compete, and by 1892 all the tracks had been converted to the narrower gauge of 1.43 metres, Stephenson.

Some proved too heavy, others too unreliable and some were dangerous, but the arrival of one revolutionary design changed

Water flows through the boiler via smaller tubes. The heats the water to boiling point, raising the steam pressure.

Spores: Incomatible, round, single, and fast moving. They had been usually found in a film of some sort of matter in an area known as the fruition. To find this film, we had to travel to these hidden regions with the equipment that we had to find it eventually.

A central part of Recherches' interdisciplinary design was the lecture 'Multiple tables: one through it, four the top, eleven enlarged: the explorers' view, and Recherches the master's view inside. A lecture space was added to several stories from the explorers' level and extending, helping to split the two guests along the table. While master's table more private and more social efficiency. Reiter's table below, and then again the Recherches became the master's table, the public space.

The floating rafts in North Wales are a marvel of 19th-century engineering. It was built to transport fish out from the quays around the town of Barmouth. It consisted, in fact, of the remains of the shipwreck of the barken Perthling. It was used in 1826, when a storm drove 100 tons of the engine ashore to sea in the quays.

By the 1880s, the cables generating so much work carrying data for the French could hardly stay there any more because destined for a passenger steamer, which meant the cables had to be reconnected. The solution was for several small engine engines to be built, which were among the first motor cable locomotives in the world. By 1890, there were no working line, but even some of the best in cable with the device.

Later, a revolutionary idea was presented to the railway: that wire rope Engineer Robert Fournier had patented the "Double Drive", an ingenious double-ended traction system. This was a wire rope locomotive that could be built and driven on just 2 cables, which saved the expense of digging two tracks and installed the power system. The first of these was built in 1901, and over the next 17 years another three Double Drives were built for the railway. They were so successful that Robert Fournier allowed the railway to use his patent for his future, creating a credit on 10 to 10 day.

The first electric train was tested as far back as 1837. Unlike steam

The first electric passenger train was presented by Werner von Siemens at an exhibition in Berlin in 1879. Consisting of a small locomotive and three cars, it reached a speed of just 13km/h.

The ETR 200 is a record-breaking electric passenger train. It is widely considered one of the first ever high-speed trains and was put into service in 1936. In 1939, it broke the speed record for trains by reaching just over 201km/h.

The ICE (InterCity Express) is one of Germany's most successful electric trains. The third generation ICE 3, can reach speeds of 300km/h. Since 2018, it has run on entirely renewable energy sources.

The famous DRG Class SVT 877 Hamburg Flyer, often referred to as the 'Flying Hamburger', was first put into service in 1933. Its smooth, rounded shape was influenced by Zeppelin airships allowing for minimal air resistance.

The Deltic, built in 1956, was considered the most powerful diesel locomotive in the world at that time.

The hierarchy 126 is one of the most successful diesel trains of all time. So named because it was designed to cruise at 126 mph (about 201 km/h) when in service, it also holds the all-time speed record for diesel trains of 238 km/h, which it reached in 1987.

ANCIENT VESSELS

Before the invention of the internal combustion engine in the late 19th century CE, the fastest and most reliable way to both travel and transport cargo was not over land, but by water. For at least 10,000 years humans have used boats on lakes and rivers, and later, after the invention of sail- and sail-powered ships, on the oceans too. This advance opened up a new world of exploration, trade and conflict.

Polynesian voyaging canoes were used here around 3,000 years ago by Southeast Asian explorers during their epic voyages of discovery into the Pacific. Their two wooden hulls, lashed together with rope and bamboo, provided a stable platform even in heavy seas, and their sharp hulls sliced easily through the water. This design is as effective it's still used today.

Used by the ancient Greeks from at least 900 BCE, pentecostans (meaning "fifty-oared") were a type of galley – a long wooden vessel powered by rowers and, when the wind was favourable, a single large sail. Pentecostans were fast and highly manoeuvrable. They could carry large, transport soldiers, fight other vessels or carry out raids on coastal towns and villages.

Troians were swift, manoeuvrable and powerful weapons used extensively by the ancient Persians, Phoenicians, Greeks and Romans during the last century BCE. Rumours set in three levels below the top deck of a Trojan meant 'three rows' in Greek, about whom were others to shoot at enemy vessels, and soldiers to jump aboard when they got close enough. But a Trojan's most powerful weapon was the bronze ram fixed to the prow - capable of splitting timbers and puncturing hulls.

The ancient Phoenicians, who lived in what is now Lebanon, were masters of the sea. They were the first people to navigate the Mediterranean. Phoenician sailors used "galley" or "triremes." These ships had side hulls to carry plenty of oars, and were often decorated with carved horse heads.

DRAGONSHIPS

During the early Middle Ages, few sights were as terrifying as a dragonship bearing swiftly down onto a beach: the fantastically curved figurehead looming through the sea mist; vast, rhythmically rising and dipping a blood-red sail lit with wind – and an eager crew, fully armed and ready to raid, steal and capture slaves.

most of cars, instead of benches, rows set on wooden stands which also held their personal belongings while passengers and food were stashed under the deck. Although immensely strong, dragage was light enough for the crew to drag their service by hand.

Life onboard dragonships was challenging. Vikings often had to use big horses or heavy seas. Dragonships could not be used, and there was no shelter from the wind, rain or sun. All this handling was exhausting, but it gave the men strength and stamina - useful attributes when it came time to fight. Many historians believe it was a Viking called Leif Erikson who was the first European to cross the Atlantic and set foot on continental North America. This gives just how remarkable the Vikings and their dragonships really were.

MEDIEVAL VESSELS

Although ancient vessels (see pages 8–9) were still used throughout the Medieval period 500–1500 CE, advances in technology allowed naval architects to design bigger, better and more durable ships. These vessels could travel farther and carry out cargo, allowing for more profitable trade between distant nations. European explorers sailed venture into the open ocean to discover new places, opening trade routes and expanding empires – often at the expense of the indigenous people living there.

Used widely in the seas of Northern Europe, ogo were sturdy and reliable cargo vessels, capable of carrying much more than the smaller boat. Powered by a single square sail and steered with a rudder, ogo were more maneuverable than their bulky ships made them appear, and they could negotiate the open sea as well as traverse wide rivers to reach inland ports.

Klax's men a type of longboat used by the Vikings for trade, transport and exploration. Like the drakingship, it was self-sar-powered, but the hull was taller and wider to allow more cargo to be loaded. Trade items included wool, timber, wine and furs, which were transported to our Northern Europe, Mediterranean, and Norse settlements in Iceland and Greenland.

Galleys were used wherever it proved tiresome and remained popular in the Medieval period, especially with the great Mediterranean powers of the Venetian republic, and the Byzantine and Ottoman Empires. Armed galleys were favoured by pirates, who set out from their bases on the North African coast to attack ships and raid coastal villages.

Swift, versatile, capable of soaring, veering and swooping shallow coastlines, coves and rivers, canals were the perfect place for trading, exploring and fighting. Powered by either square or lateen sails, lateen-rigged boats and armed with cannons, these versatile vessels were widely used, especially by European nations.

- EXTRAORDINARY VESSELS -
MARY ROSE

On the 19th July, 1545 England faced an invasion. Francis I, King of France, had assembled an armada of around 200 vessels – sailing ships and oared galleys – and sent it across the narrow English Channel to offload a French army of 30,000 men on the south coast. England's King Henry VIII's far smaller fleet of around 80 vessels, would need to prevent the armada from landing. As evening fell, and taking advantage of a fresh rising breeze, the English sailed out to meet their enemy. At the head, pennants fluttering and bristling with around 70 guns, sped the mighty 600 ton carrack warship Mary Rose, pride of the fleet and King Henry's favourite vessel.

Smoke and flame erupted along the Mary Rose's larboard side as its cannons fired at the approaching French ships; to the thousands of people watching from the cliffs, the noise would have sounded like thunder. Then, to bring its portside guns into the action: to bear as the others were reloaded, the grand old ship began to turn about...and at that crucial moment a gust of wind hit its sails, causing it to list... Water poured in through the still-open gunports, flooding the lower decks.

Realizing their ship was doomed, the sailors and soldiers scrambled to reach the open weather deck and leap overboard...only to be trapped by the anti-boarding netting strung over it. Seawater foamed around them, rising higher and higher... From his vantage point on Southsea Castle, King Henry himself watched the Mary Rose capsize and disappear beneath the waves. Of the around 400 men onboard, only 35 escaped with their lives.

TAKE A BREATH!

Try this breathing exercise to help you relax:

STEP 1

Make sure you are sitting comfortably in a quiet and safe place. When you feel ready, close your eyes. Notice your breathing. Think about how it feels breathing in and breathing out. Try to breathe in through your nose and out through your mouth.

STEP 2

Place your hand on your tummy and focus on the feeling of your stomach rising and falling with each breath. When you breathe in, quietly say 'in' to yourself, and when you breathe out, quietly say 'out' to yourself.

STEP 3

Concentrate on nothing but your breathing and try to let go of any other thoughts you may have.

When you've had lots of practice at the breathing exercise, see if you can think about a happy memory at the same time. This way, your happy memory will take up all the space in your brain, and there won't be any room for the worries.
